

Roy Deason
GFGC President

Roy Deason, raised on a small farm in Mobile County, Alabama, grew up interested in agriculture. His high school endeavors in 4-H and agriculture classes led to his undergraduate and master's degree in Animal Science from Auburn University and UGA, respectively. His first job was Assistant County Agent in Worth County, which was followed by positions as Farm Bureau Member Services Representative, County Extension Director, Franklin County, and Forage Seed Marketing Representative for three seed companies. He is a past AFGC Board Member, served on the first National Grassland Conservation Coalition, first VP for the Georgia Grassland Conservation Coalition and is now the first President of Georgia's Forage and Grassland Council. Presently Roy's time is divided between the family beef farm and his feed and seed store in Royston, Ga.
